THE START OF HALLOWE'EN

Hallowe'en began about 2,000 years ago in Ireland. People believed that on one night each year, 31 October, the spirits of the dead walked in towns and villages. Rather than honour their dead relatives as in some cultures, the people were afraid. They dressed in costumes to scare away the spirits and stay safe.

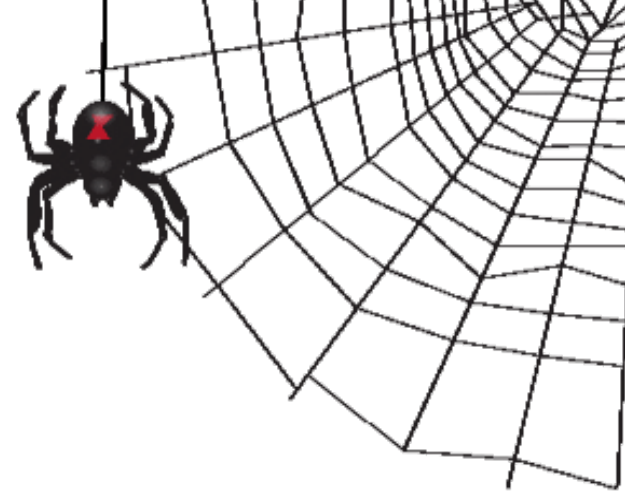

THE START OF HALLOWE'EN

1,200 years ago the Christian church moved All Saints Day to 1 November. This is a day when the spirits of dead relatives are celebrated. The night before 1 November was called All Hallows Eve, when people scared away bad spirits so they could welcome good spirits were celebrated on All Saints Day. All Hallows Eve was later called Hallowe'en.

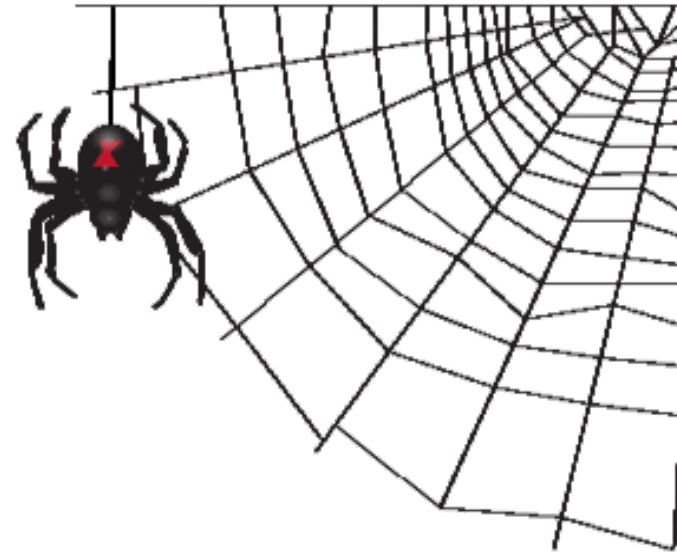

HALLOWE'EN TODAY

Many countries celebrate Hallowe'en now. People enjoy dressing in costumes, many of which are not scary. Children love to make jack-o-lanterns and trick-or-treat on Hallowe'en evening. They wear costumes and knock on neighbours' doors, shouting, 'trick-or-treat' and are given candy.

THE MAGIC SPELL

Mitch and Beth pretended to make a magic potion. They found a big, black cooking pot. Mitch threw in his toenail clippings and a stinky sock. Beth added seven dead flies and some spider's web.

They stirred and said, 'Abracadabra!' They danced and sang, 'Bibbity-boo!' They waved their wands and looked into the pot.

Inside the pot they saw some carrots and onions. They looked surprised. They heard Mom call, 'Where is the dinner?'
